Michigan Self Help For Hard of Hearing People

Volume 10 Number 2

SHHH & YOU

More than 24 million people in the U.S. have a hearing loss that can hinder daily communication. That translates to one in ten people. By age 65, one in three people has a hearing loss. This invisible condition affects us, family, friends, co-workers and everyone around us. SHHH believes that people can help one another, can be helped, and can participate successfully in society. The mission of SHHH is to open the world of communication to people with hearing loss by providing information, education, advocacy, and support.

Self Help for Hard of Hearing People, Inc. (SHHH) is the largest international consumer organization dedicated to the well-being of people who do not hear well.

If you are not a member of national SHHH, you are encouraged to join. Membership includes the bi-monthly SHHH journal, Hearing Loss, an outstanding information source. Dues are $25 for USA individual/family, $50 for Professionals. Make checks payable to "SHHH" and mail to:

Preparing for Communication Access During Power Outages: Equipment Needs

By: Dana Mulvany

People with hearing loss are especially at risk of losing communication access during power outages since the devices we use for communication access generally require power in some form. Here are some suggestions for equipment that can help preserve your ability to receive information about emergencies and to communicate with others.

Universal power supplies (UPSes). UPSes are often used as a temporary source of power for computers (to keep them running long enough so they can be shut down properly) but they can be used for other devices, such as AC-powered telephones or TTYs. (If you have a desktop computer, it's a very good idea to use a UPS with the computer so you will not lose your work during unexpected power outages.)

Surge protectors. Important and expensive equipment, such as TVs, computers and adaptive equipment should be protected from power surges that can be caused by lightning storms. (Many UPSes also have surge protection built in.)

Battery back-up capability. When shopping for AC-powered equipment such as certain amplified phones, VCO phones, TTYs, or alerting technology, check whether the equipment needs and has battery back-up capability if the power goes out. Also, if the equipment uses a rechargeable battery or batteries, can standard batteries be used if the existing batteries cannot be recharged right away?

Battery-powered equipment. You may want to consider getting battery-powered equipment, either in place of or to supplement AC-powered equipment. For example, are you considering whether to get a laptop computer or a desktop computer? A laptop computer will be easier to power from different sources, such as vehicles. Some laptop computers are designed to have an especially long battery life and may also have the option of additional high-capacity batteries. (Computers can also be used for making Internet Relay calls, and thus are an alternative to TTYs.)

Alternative sources of light. People with more severe hearing loss generally need light in the dark in order to understand other people. Although flashlights are important, a source of light that will illuminate people's faces without needing to be held will be much easier to use. Oil lamps and candles need to be handled very carefully to avoid fire (first ask yourself whether the people or pets in your house might easily knock them over). Some kinds of lights are much more efficient with battery power than others -- the label may indicate this information.

Wireless pagers and phones. Most wireless devices, including wireless phones, now allow two-way communication by e-mail. Some also provide access to customized web pages designed for a small screen. Generally, text communication seems to require less power than voice communication. Some wireless phones can be used as modems for computers or hand-held devices, thus potentially providing full access to the Internet. Because most emergencies are now reported over the Internet by text, Internet access can be very useful for researching accessible information about emergencies. Wireless devices are also an effective way of quickly being notified by the Emergency Email Network about emergencies wherever you are (unless you happen to be in an area that is not covered by the service). Some of the new wireless phones have been designed to work with new portable TTYs and thus can also meet text-based telecommunications needs.

Power inverters for cars. Suppose you have an important device with rechargeable batteries that can't use other kinds of batteries, and the power has been out for a couple of days. One thing you may be able to do is to buy a power inverter so that you can charge the device while you're driving. You will need to make sure the power inverter has enough wattage to handle the device you want to charge.

Note: be careful about powering devices from one's vehicle. Never run your vehicle (or gasoline-powered generator) in a standing position inside a garage or if the exhaust pipe is blocked by snow. Carbon monoxide fumes from the car are odorless and injure or kill people. Running the car for a long time in a standing position may also drain the car's battery.

Portable power supplies. These are often used to jump start a car with a dead battery, but some can power AC-powered devices or devices with a cigarette lighter adapter. Costco and Sam's have been sources of such power supplies, but possibly automotive stores will also have similar products. Some may also have a built-in light.

Gasoline-powered generators or solar-powered chargers. Both are expensive but for some people will be worth the peace of mind. Gasoline-powered generators are often very noisy. Solar-powered chargers generally have a high up-front cost but there may be special tax incentives in some states for installing them in a residence. Follow the safety instructions carefully for the gas-powered ones.

9-inch TVs with closed captioning capability. Nine-inch TVs require less power than larger TVs, and many come with a cigarette lighter adapter. Although nine-inch TVs are not required to have closed captioning, some manufacturers have included this functionality anyway. (We do not have a comprehensive list of nine-inch TVs with closed captioning and because models change quickly, we suggest asking store representatives which nine-inch TVs have this capability.) Such TVs can be a useful method of receiving local information if you have alternate sources of power for them such as those mentioned above.

Are You Prepared? Checklist for Power Outages

If the power goes out in my home:

- Do I still have an effective way of calling people?
- Will I be able to understand local emergency information from my local government?
- Will I be able to get understandable news updates from news stations and other sources?
- Do I have lighting sources to let me speechread people's faces in the dark?
- Do I have enough batteries to power my hearing aid(s) and/or cochlear implant processors for several weeks?

Taking extra measures to preserve your communication access during power outages now could save your life and others in the future, ease stress for you during a difficult time, and give you peace of mind. Good luck!

MICHIGAN SHHH GETS A FACE LIFT

On the web, that is! MI SHHH launched a new web site in April. This face-lift is not just skin deep either. We hope you'll agree that there is more information and that it is easy to find. So what's so great about the new site? Well, the best way to find out is to go take a look for yourself at: www.mi-shhh.org. Some highlights will be covered here to let you know just what you'll miss if you DON'T pay us a visit!

Chapters: The new chapter index shows approximately where in the state each chapter is located. This will make it easier for people not familiar with the city or area, to tell at a glance, if there are chapters near them. Each chapter will have more space to report on the happenings and events in their chapter and in their geographical area.

Advocacy: In this section, you will find links to government web sites to obtain information about the latest bills, how to contact your state and federal representatives, as well as information about advocating for captioning, hearing access in the judicial system, and other pertinent issues.

HTRS: A bit more explanation about our HTRS (Hearing Technology Resource Specialist) program for those who are not familiar with it, and a list of topics discussed at the presentations.

Information: In this area, there will be articles that were published in the Mi-SHHH-iganian prior to the Winter of 2004. We will try to add more of the older articles on a regular basis. If there are any in particular that you are interested in seeing online, send an e-mail to the webmaster. You will also find the MI SHHH resource library listing here in portable document format (.pdf). Don't worry if you're not sure what PDF is. There is a link to get Adobe PDF Reader for free, which is what you need to read this file. There is also a link here to the SHHH forums where you can connect to other hard of hearing people worldwide!

Newsletters: The current issue of the Mi-SHHH-iganian will be at this location. Past issues are available here as well, beginning with the Winter 2004 issue. There is now the option of receiving an e-mail notification of when the current issue is online. Just send an email to newsletter@mi-shhh.org When you do this, you will not receive a printed copy of the newsletter.

Events: In this area we will focus on SHHH events such as the 25th anniversary Convention being held in Washington DC from June 29 – July 3rd, 2005. You can find more about this at www.hearingloss.org. We will also focus on MI SHHH events like the 2006 Expo being held in Grand Rapids on April 28th and 29th of 2006.

State Profile: This is an overview of services in the State of Michigan for Hard of Hearing people. There is more information about specific agencies in articles in the "Information" section of the web site.

Donations/Fundraisers: Here you will find a donation form that you can download, print and send in. We will also keep you updated on any fundraisers that MI SHHH is conducting so that if you want to participate or help out, you can do that easily.

WELCOME ABOARD!!!

Michigan Cochlear Implant Support Group
Soon to Become a MI-SHHH Chapter!

The Michigan Cochlear Implant Support Group has been in existence for 17 years and affiliated with Cochlear Implant Association, Inc (CIAI), the international support network for people with cochlear implants (CIs). Due to funding issues, the CIAI needed to find other options for meeting support needs of people with CIs. In July of 2003, CIAI stopped taking memberships and began work on a merger with SHHH as a CI division. A CIAI member now serves on the Board of Trustees of SHHH and a section of the Hearing Loss Journal has been dedicated to CI technology and support. SHHH will provide a CI track at the annual SHHH International Convention.

With this reorganization, the Michigan Cochlear Implant Group has petitioned to SHHH to become an SHHH chapter, adopting the name of MI CI SHHH Chapter. MI CI SHHH differs from other chapters by focusing specifically on cochlear implants and issues that are unique to it such as surgery and programming issues, manufacturer upgrades (unlike with hearing aids, once surgery is done the CI user can only get technology components from the manufacturer of the electrode they received), rehabilitation as the CI recipient learns to hear again with electrical stimulation and assistive listening connective techniques, which is different than connective issues of hearing aids.

Everyone who is interested in knowing more about the CI is welcome to join this unique chapter. MI CI SHHH is a mobile chapter, meeting in three different locations in the state so that meetings might be closer to the CI recipients' homes. CI professionals present at each meeting and are available to answer questions and address concerns.

MI-SHHH Chapter Activities

By: Marla Schindler

Summer is finally here! I'm sure most of you are very busy with outdoor activities, trying to squeeze as many good times in as possible. If you have a hearing loss, that can limit you at times, and perhaps make you feel left out or depressed. At our SHHH Chapter meetings, we discuss these feelings and help each other deal with those and other feelings and situations that we need help with. We offer a great deal of information about modern technology to help those with hearing loss. We meet wonderful people who understand our frustrations when dealing with everyday situations in the hearing world. Come to a meeting in your area. This is a group for you! I can almost guarantee that if you come to one meeting, you will come back for more! As always, family and friends are always welcome.

BIRMINGHAM AREA SHHH

June 9: Assembly of Hospital Kit Packets for HOH persons in health care facilities. Come lend a hand and enjoy wonderful refreshments and fellowship.

NCRA's New Online Directory Offers Deaf and Hard of Hearing Individuals Immediate Access to Qualified CART Providers

Communication Access Realtime Translation (CART), also referred to as realtime captioning, is a way to transcribe the spoken word into readable English text and serves as an important communication tool for people who are deaf or hard of hearing. To assist individuals in locating qualified CART providers, the National Court Reporters Association (NCRA) has introduced the online CART Provider Locator. This free directory will help you find a CART provider within seconds and provides a listing of their contact information, areas of specialty, certifications, and references. The CART providers that are listed are all members of NCRA.

For more information, please visit NCRA's CART Provider Directory at:

<http://cart.ncraonline.org/directory/index/shtml>

NCRA is a 26,000 member non-profit organization representing the judicial reporting and captioning professions.

Online Support for Persons with Hearing Loss Recovering from Addiction

For a person who is addicted to drugs or alcohol, and who is also deaf or hard of hearing, finding support for recovery is almost impossible. Around the United States, there are a handful of substance abuse treatment programs striving to meet the communication needs of people with hearing loss.

The biggest challenges occur when the newly sober person returns home. Twelve-step support groups, such as Alcoholics Anonymous, are often inaccessible. People who are hard of hearing struggle to hear during group discussions. People who are deaf, may need a sign language interpreter to participate (an additional cost that is difficult for volunteer groups to manage). A new web site has been developed in hopes of bridging the communication needs of this population.

Addiction Help! Deaf & Hard of Hearing is a project of the Michigan Coalition for Deaf and Hard of Hearing People. Comprised of agencies, businesses, and individuals who serve the deaf and hard of hearing community, the organization is the sponsor of the E-Michigan Deaf & Hard of Hearing People web site (www.michdhh.org). This is a highly popular site, initiated with a grant from SBC Communications Inc., featuring information, resources, news, and an extensive calendar of deaf and hard of hearing related events in Michigan. Addiction Help! is located on the E-Michigan website and can also be accessed directly at www.addictionhelpdhh.org.

SBC Communications Inc. and the SBC Foundation recently awarded the Coalition an additional grant to develop the interactive substance abuse recovery web site, bringing the total company support to over $100,000 since the year 2000.

The site features links to online 12-step type support groups on the web. Some of the support groups are especially for people who are deaf or hard of hearing. Others are for the general population. The text format of the discussions are more accessible for those unable to adequately hear and comprehend speech. These online groups are accessible and available 24 hours a day!

Michigan Association for Deaf, Hearing and Speech Services (MADHS), located in Lansing, Michigan, has set up a computer for community members to use during business hours. Please contact MADHS for further details at:
